DICKINSON ON HURRY UP TRIP

Made a Flying Tour of Inspection Around Oahu Chain of Fortifications.

WAS BANQUETED LAST NIGHT

Promised Much Army Work and Big Increase in Number of Local Garrisons.

"The principal object of my visit here, so far as Hawaii is concerned, is to look after the defense of the Islands, and the military posts, and I will say to you, what you probably already know, that the United States government has some rather ambitious plans in connection with the extension of these posts and the military establishment here, and it is probable, in the near future that there will be a considerable increase in the number of soldiers that will come from the United States and remain here as a permanent garrison."

Secretary of War Dickinson has seen the work done in this American outpost for the protection of these Islands from any invading foe and for the protection of the American western coast. He has been whirled from one end of the island to the other; has seen the Pearl Harbor work in progress; walked over the Cavalry reservation; climbed Diamond Head, inside and out; peered over the Pali, and generally has seen more of Oahu than most people have who have lived here all their lives.

To finish his busy day, the secretary attended a splendid banquet, given in his honor by the chamber of commerce and the merchants' association; made a short speech in answer to one of welcome, made by E. D. Tenney, and later made another more extended speech in the Young Hotel pavilion.

It was at the banquet and the public reception afterwards that the public of Honolulu had some opportunity of seeing and becoming acquainted with the secretary of war. During the day he was either out of town or going through it by auto so fast that he could not be distinguished in the dust.

Banquet Brilliant Affair.
The banquet given in honor of Secretary Dickinson and his party was a brilliant affair, held in the Waikiki dining room of the Alexander Young hotel. The guests included the members of the boards of directors of the two commercial bodies, the army and navy officers, the members of the consular corps, territorial and federal officials and a few others. The banquet hall was very tastefully decorated and the menu was quite up to the Young standard, one course being a novelty, not only to the distinguished visitors, but to many Hawaiians. This consisted of an ice served in scented oat pappules, one pine to a guest, the fruit being fresh plucked and having the green tops attached.

Before the guests seated themselves, E. D. Tenney, representing the chamber of commerce and sponsoring the merchants' association, made a very graceful welcome to Secretary Dickinson to the Crossroads of the Pacific, expressing regret only in the fact that the day of the secretary's visit was not a more auspicious one.

In reply, Secretary Dickinson stated that the reason he had not arranged to stay on the day was the fact that many of his people who also were staying on the day, were using the fact that he did not come as an excuse for not coming. He said that he had not arranged to stay on the day, but that he would stay on the day after tomorrow.

ADMIRAL BECKLEY ON LAST CRUISE

Well-Known Mariner Goes Over the Horizon Never to Return to the Home Port.

DIED ON COAST YESTERDAY

Was Hawaiian of High Birth and a Character Widely Known in the Islands.

George C. Beckley, one of the best known part-Hawaiian citizens of the Territory of Hawaii, died yesterday morning in San Francisco, having arrived here from Honolulu during the past week from Honolulu on the Matson steamship, Wilhelmina. Mr. Beckley died of cancer of the stomach. After many months of ill-health here, during which time he steadily declined, he accepted the advice of physicians and friends and went to the Coast in the hope of prolonging his life either by a change of climate or an operation. That he believed he would live longer is evidenced by the fact that he had set his heart on going to San Pedro to witness the departure of the yacht Hawaii in the trans-Pacific race to Honolulu, on July 9.

George C. Beckley was born on the island of Hawaii, on May 5, 1849, at Waimea, which at the present time is the headquarters of the famous Parker Ranch Company. To follow in detail the experiences and vicissitudes of forty years life at sea of Mr. Beckley is no small task, as it clearly demonstrates the indomitable energy, will power and force of character that was embodied in the makeup of the man. He was born in humble circumstances although his ancestors were of the highest rank under the Hawaiian system of nobility. His sister, Mrs. Maria Beckley Kshea, a noble lady during the Kamehameha reigns just prior to the accession of King Kalakaua, died last year, also of cancer.

Mr. Beckley was the son of the High Chiefess Kahina and of William Beckley, the latter being the son of Capt. George Beckley, a foreigner who not only was the first military commander of the old Honolulu fort at the foot of what is now Fort Street, but was one of Kamehameha the Great's advisers. The Chiefess Kahina was the daughter of Prince Hoolulu, brother of Prince Hoopili and son of Kamehameha, twin brother of Kamehameha, whose offices are to be seen upon the Hawaiian coat-of-arms, which is also the impress seen upon all Hawaiian coins and now used largely in jeweled ornaments, as watch fobs and pins.

Hoopili and Hoolulu, who are central figures in old-time Hawaiian history, were the two princes who watched at Kalua, near where the remains of Kamehameha are supposed to have been buried permanently, until the guards and mourners became negligent and sleepy, when the two princes possessed themselves of Kamehameha's bones and carried them off in the middle of night. Hoopili left in a canoe and landed near the present boundary of North and South Kona, where he was joined by Hoolulu, who made the trip along the shore. According to tradition Hoolulu was a Hawaiian on the beach and saw him, fearing that the native might tell others he had met the prince there. Neither prince wished any news of their whereabouts that night to be made public, for they were the ones to whom was designated the duty of interring the bones of Kamehameha in a secret place and the secret was supposed to have died with them. However, it is said the news has been passed down the family, and at the present time it is said that Paul W. Beckley, nephew of George C. Beckley, alone possesses the secret.

George Beckley was also the brother of the late Hon. Fred K. Beckley, territorial governor of the island of Kauai under King Kalakaua.

HAWAII GETS ALL SHE WENT AFTER

Summing Up Hawaiian News at Capital as Session Dragged to Its Close.

By Ernest G. Walker.

(Mail Special to The Advertiser.)

WASHINGTON, June 23.—The close of the session finds Hawaiian matters of legislative purpose in splendid shape. The Territory has fared excellently, as usual, especially in the matter of appropriations. Although at this writing the Omnibus Public Building Bill has not actually been completed, the two Hawaiian items therein have been agreed upon by senate and house in identical language, placing them beyond the jurisdiction of committees, and therefore making certain the enactment of those provisions into law, provided the bill itself becomes law. Of that there is no reasonable doubt.

These appropriations, amounting to $300,000 for additional land for the building at Honolulu, and $200,000 for a building and site at Hilo, are the last of the session to be made for Hawaii. Delegate Kahanamoku deserves no bit the credit personally for these items, particularly for the Honolulu addition. That makes a total of $1,350,000 authorized for a public building at Honolulu, a city of 40,000 people. Nowhere in the United States can any other city of 40,000 inhabitants be found that has obtained anything like that sum for a public building. Of course, the peculiar location of Honolulu has something to do with the amount authorized, but to many members of the house it is little short of amazing that the $350,000 item should have been put upon the bill. It amounts to about one-sixth of all the money carried on the omnibus bill.

The delegate was very doubtful about his ability to obtain the appropriation, and for that reason he was cautious about saying anything regarding the item in the initial stages of its consideration. He did not want to be criticized for failing should the committee refuse to vote the amount—and there were good reasons for believing that the committee would refuse. It is certain that, even after the bill becomes law, the treasury department will take up the matter of plans for the building in the light of the larger space provided for the site.

Everything Asked For.

These appropriations, which will be followed by appropriations as fast as the money can be spent, complete a splendid record for the session of congress as far as Hawaii is concerned. The generous appropriations for Hawaiian matters must not be overlooked. (Continued on Page Two.)

HIGHER WAGERS OUT OF JAIL

Makino and Associates are Granted Commutation of Sentences.

Disguised as a Russian in a long flowing beard and an equally long flowing smile, Fred K. Makino Higgenbotham, with Negro, Soga and Tasaka, the four strike leaders, were yesterday discharged from the county jail, their sentences having been commuted.

Makino's sojourn in Asch's retreat was conducive to his adornment for he made his appearance with a wonderful creation about his chin. He received a rather cold reception at the hands of his artful followers, but made haste to be trimmed, thereupon becoming recognizable and receiving in full blast the pent up ardor of his friends.

The four men who have been serving a ten months term for conspiracy, were met at the gates of the county jail by about a hundred of their admirers and escorted down the road without demonstration until they got to (Continued on Page Four.)

SAYS LEAL IS RUNNING JOINT

Boy Stole Fifty Dollars to Shoot Craps in Brace Game in Arlington Hotel.

The usual peaceful session of the police court after a holiday recess is expected to be featured this morning by statements of a startling nature to be made on the stand by Joe Dupont, a boy who is to answer to a charge of embezzlement before Judge Andrade.

Accused by George C. Beckley, Jr., of embezzling $50 that he had collected on his account, his examination by the police took an unexpected turn and his statements as made then are to be repeated on the stand.

They implicate Joseph Leal, Sam Kamehameha, Ed. Cuney, William Cuney and other well-known young men of the city as engaging in gambling to a commercial degree. Dupont admitted to the chief of detectives during his examination that he had taken the money.

"Where is it?" asked McDuffie.

"I lost it in a crap game at the Arlington Hotel," answered the boy.

"Who were playing?"

Dupont started to give the list of names of those whom he had noticed about the table and also gave the number of the room, and day and time that he was fleeced at his employer's money.

Former Chief of Detectives Joseph Leal, who was dismissed from the police force after he had faced ugly charges of graft, is accused by the boy of running the game in company with Sam Kamehameha and a few others. Sam Kamehameha is the man lately dismissed in the circuit court on a charge of brutally running down Howard Smith and saving him badly wounded in the middle of the road some time ago. Ed. Cuney also figured in an ugly case where he appeared before a coroner's jury for killing John J. Mella-Barbosa with his automobile a short time ago.

The game in which Dupont was fleeced occurred just two days before The Advertiser printed a story to the effect that gambling was going on extensively among the chauffeurs.

The chauffeurs, according to the rumors which have preceded the arrest of Dupont for embezzlement, and which have been partially confirmed by Dupont's story, never gamble twice in the same place, but move from room to room and from building to building. They are suspected of holding forth alternately in the Arlington, over Quinn's auto stand (formerly the Auto Laundry Company) and over the Stockyard stables.

The information that Dupont is expected to supply will blast to a great degree the political aspirations of Joseph Leal, who has been advocated by the Bulletin as a good man for deputy sheriff. (Continued on Page Four.)

LEILEHUA SITE QUESTION IS NOW ALL SETTLED

Work on the new and permanent cavalry post at Leilehua may be commenced within a few minutes, as the site has been decided upon, and everything now points upon the time that plans are drawn from the quarters of the general in command at Washington. Chief Walter S. Taylor, Fifth Cavalry, commands at the military board, which understood a decade in the permanent site stated last evening that the site had been decided upon a few days ago.

One of the matters which caused a delay was an agreement with the Department of the Interior to acquire certain lands controlled by the ranch company in which a part of the post would be built. A treaty was entered into by which the government now gets control of that land which will be fenced off and become a part of the military reservation.

As to water supply the cavalry post will get what it can from present available sources and when more is needed will reach over to the Koolau range across the plains, and pipe it in.

The post is to be built in a very solid way, the buildings to be of reinforced concrete. An appropriation of $200,000 has been available for the post since. In the Senate Sundry Bill passed June 12 by the senate, was the following amendment:

"Sums of $100,000 for the house appropriation of $100,000 to erect $400,000 additional amount for the construction of cavalry post, Hawaii Territory."
